Cleveland, OH (PRWEB) December 1, 2007 -- DIY Real Estate Solutions, Inc. announced today a new product which they are calling FormWriter. This revolutionary new addition to their online property management software product is an integrated letter and forms generator, which allows the user to efficiently create written communications to residents and vendors.

"After listening to many of our clients and industry experts, we felt compelled to invest our R&D resources to solve a significant business issue they have to efficiently and effectively communicate with their tenants, owners and vendors," said Steve Lloyd, CEO of DIY Real Estate Solutions. "With FormWriter, our clients can create any number of user defined documents, with access to all of the information in the DIY property management database."

FormWriter allows users of the DIY property management software application to extract applicant, resident, unit, property and financial information from their data for the timely preparation of forms and letters such as leases, three-day letters, lease renewals, contract expirations, past due notices, eviction notices and other legal forms and letters.

This exciting new product:

- Eliminates the need to manually pull information to generate internally defined and legally required forms and letters, a time consuming and error prone process.
- Dramatically reduces errors caused by missing or overlooked information, which, oftentimes, results in lost revenues.
- Streamlines the leasing and management process by automatically merging applicant and resident information from the property management software system into lease documents, tenant notices and other necessary and legally required documents.

With FormWriter, owners and managers of rental properties can now efficiently and economically communicate, using traditional printed output or via e-mail, either individually or in bulk, with their residents, vendors and owners, with a simple push of a button.
